LAND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

We acknowledge that the land upon which the Salt Lake City Public Art Program operates – the land where we gather, create, and appreciate art – is the traditional and unceded territory of the Shoshone, Goshute, Paiute, and Ute Peoples. The history of this land predates the establishment of Salt Lake City, and we honor the Indigenous Peoples who have stewarded this land for generations. Let us actively work towards dismantling systems of inequality and injustice, as we strive to create a more inclusive and equitable future together.

PROJECT BACKGROUND & SITE DESCRIPTION

Salt Lake City has designated approximately three acres of the former Fleet Block for a new public open space serving the Granary District, Central 9th, and Ballpark neighborhoods and the broader city. Located on the southeast corner of the block between 300 West and 400 West and 800 South and 900 South, the site has been the focus of sustained community planning and advocacy for more than a decade. The block takes its current name from its historic use as the City's fleet maintenance and operations site, which remained active until 2009, and will be renamed through a future process.

The Fleet Block Open Space is envisioned as a vibrant, safe, and restorative public environment that reflects Salt Lake City's commitment to being a welcoming, inclusive, and just city. Grounded in principles of dignity, fortitude, industry, and social justice, this project seeks to support gathering, reflection, and civic belonging while connecting natural, recreational, residential, commercial, and cultural spaces.

This public art commission is informed by years of City-led community engagement, as well as an ongoing engagement and planning process for the Open Space led by the consultants, Sasaki, in collaboration with Salt Lake City Public Lands and the Salt Lake City Arts Council. Through this process, the site was defined as a place for community and belonging; gathering and learning; rest and climate resilience; justice and accountability; and progress through shared growth. Together, these efforts articulate community values and expectations, including the importance of honoring social justice history, acknowledging lived experience, and ensuring that public art contributes meaningfully to healing, visibility, and collective memory. These engagement outcomes directly shape the goals, scope, and structure of this Call for Artists.

Fleet Block's history is closely tied to community expression and social justice. In 2020, following the murder of George Floyd, murals memorializing local, state, and national victims of harmful police interactions were created on the site by a collective of anonymous artists. Though temporary, the murals became a catalyst for dialogue and reflection. While the buildings were removed in 2025 due to environmental and structural concerns, the conversations and values the murals generated continue to inform the City's approach to the open space and this public art commission.

Salt Lake City has also actively engaged with the surrounding community to balance needs and priorities while addressing environmental remediation and site preparation. The future Fleet Block Open Space will continue this approach by integrating thoughtfully designed public art that honors the principles of social justice, reflects the City's values, and inspires residents to envision and shape a more equitable community.

PROJECT SCOPE

The Salt Lake City Arts Council's Public Art Program, in collaboration with Salt Lake City Public Lands, the Mayor's Office, and project stakeholders, is commissioning an artist or artist-led team to create a significant public artwork for the Fleet Block Open Space. The artwork should reflect the City's vision of a welcoming, inclusive, and just community, engaging themes such as dignity, fortitude, industry, and civic belonging and advancing an aspirational vision that centers equity and justice and may be explored through abstraction, metaphor, or experiential design. Artists are encouraged to explore how public space can embody these values through form, material, symbolism, and experience—creating a work that invites reflection, gathering, and connection.

Artists may work across a wide range of media and approaches, including but not limited to sculpture, environmental or land-based art, installation, environmentally responsive work, interdisciplinary or socially engaged practices, and artist-designed functional or utilitarian elements. Specific materials and forms will be developed during the proposal phase in coordination with project partners.

The selected artist or team will:

- Design, fabricate, and install the central or anchor artwork, responding to the physical, social, and cultural context of Fleet Block while embodying values of justice, dignity, resilience, and civic belonging.
- Help define opportunities for future artist interventions by other community artists and actively imagine how these additional artworks, which will be commissioned and installed by the City through a separate process, can interact with, respond to, and reflect upon the anchor artwork.
- Collaborate closely with City staff and open space designers to integrate all artistic elements harmoniously, supporting the overall aesthetic, functionality, and accessibility of the site.

ARTWORK GOALS

At its core, the Fleet Block Open Space public artwork should look forward – not to create an endpoint, but to invite reflection, connection, and imagination toward a more equitable and just future.

The artwork should meet some or all of the following conceptual and aesthetic goals:

- Embody a compelling, forward-looking artistic vision that reflects values of justice, resilience, and collective civic engagement, inspiring new possibilities for shared futures.
- Serve as a place of connection and belonging, supporting visibility, dignity, and care for all visitors.
- Integrate seamlessly with the site's landscape and design, enhancing the Open Space as a place to gather, reflect, and imagine a more equitable future.
- Respond thoughtfully to the physical, cultural, and historical context of Fleet Block, while inspiring dialogue, curiosity, and forward-looking perspectives.
- Present a vision for how community artists' contributions might relate to and enhance the anchor artwork, creating a cohesive and inclusive experience across the site.
- Demonstrate craftsmanship and technical excellence, ensuring long-term durability, public safety, and accessibility in accordance with City standards.
- Invite engagement, exploration, and interaction, encouraging visitors to experience the site as a welcoming and dynamic public environment.

ARTIST SELECTION CRITERIA & ARTWORK PROPOSAL DEVELOPMENT PROCESS

The selection of an artist or artist-led team is subject to, but not limited by, the following qualifications:

- Professional experience demonstrating a well-developed and successful body of site-specific public art projects of comparable scope and scale, as evidenced through visual documentation and past work;

- Ability to create conceptually rich and contextually responsive artwork that engages the history, values, and future vision of a civic space;
- Demonstrated experience working collaboratively with project stakeholders, community representatives, and design professionals to develop integrated, meaningful, and durable public artworks;
- Capacity to articulate a cohesive artistic framework in which additional artworks by other community artists may exist in relationship to the primary artwork;
- Ability to meet deadlines and budgets and to perform work in a timely and professional manner;
- Willingness to consult with and work collaboratively with the Salt Lake Art Design Board, City staff, and project stakeholders throughout the entire artwork development process;
- Strong understanding of design within a complex urban environment and the ability to respond sensitively to site, context, and community.

The Salt Lake Art Design Board, in consultation with project stakeholders, will review all properly submitted applications and will select a short list of up to five (5) finalists to advance to the proposal development phase.

All finalists will be required to attend an orientation meeting to learn more about the project and receive materials to support proposal development. Finalists will have the opportunity to conduct site visits and, if desired, undertake additional outreach or research to further inform their proposals.

Finalists will develop site-specific proposals and present them to the Salt Lake Art Design Board and project partners. Proposals should communicate ideas through scaled designs, renderings, and/or models, accompanied by a written statement describing the project intent, proposed materials, fabrication and installation methods, project schedule, and an itemized budget. Proposals should also present a vision for how future artworks by other community artists might interact with, respond to, or complement the primary artwork as part of a cohesive site-wide approach.

Finalists will receive a $3,500 stipend for proposal development, including research, meetings, presentations, and related expenses. The stipend is inclusive of all travel, lodging, and shipping costs. If a finalist is awarded the commission, the stipend amount will be deducted from the total commission budget.

ARTWORK COMMISSION BUDGET

The total budget for this commission is $350,000. The inclusion of a public art installation(s) within the future Fleet Block Open Space is supported by the voter-approved Parks, Trails, and Open Space General Obligation \(GO\) Bond.

This commission amount is inclusive of any and all costs associated with the commission, including but not limited to: the artist's design fee, consultation fees (such as structural engineering consultation), preparation and submittal of final artwork proposal, design collaboration throughout the length of the project, insurance (including Utah Workers Compensation), tools and materials, artwork fabrication, transportation & installation, building or site modifications, travel to and from Salt Lake City, per diem expenses, and a recommended contingency fund to address unexpected expenses (recommended to be set at 10%).
